Meditation of the Day:

Drinking the Cup of Christ's Love

It is the intense love of Christ which fired the zeal of all the great missionaries, past and present. They could not contain within themselves the love which filled their spirits. As human love overflows from the embrace of the couple into the children, who have been described as “love made visible,” so the missionary’s love makes visible new children in Christ. It is in terms of this intensity of love that the extraordinary sacrifices of the saints can be understood as heroic instead of insane. As the Song of Songs proclaims: Were one to offer all he owns to purchase love, he would be roundly mocked (8:7). We should give all for the pearl of great price, which is Christ. Just as all married couples are called to love each other for their whole lives, no matter the sacrifice involved, so it is the teaching of the Church that every man is called to become a saint. In the words of Christ: you cannot give yourself to God and money. Take up your cross and follow me. Enter by the narrow gate. The lukewarm I will spit out of my mouth. For most of us, love, human and divine, is desirable up to the point of suffering and sacrifice. Or, if at first we feel that we would do anything for the person we love, gradually our fervor dies. When we try to pinpoint how this happens, I think we would often find that a time came when a sacrifice was demanded of us which we refused to make. This decision is not always made in full consciousness. The moment of the test comes, we let it pass, we forget it; and then one day we discover that our life is not being lived out of intensity of commitment.

Reading the lives of the saints, we are struck by the presence of turning points when these lovers of Christ took up the great challenge. Their love of the good was so great that they staked their lives to win the battle against the evils which surrounded them. As a result of this same “all of nothing” attachment to the good, they were able to overcome in themselves every fault which would make them lazy, inept, betraying servants of Christ....If we wish to love with all the intensity of our being, then we must be ready to sacrifice all things which prevent us from being loving every moment of the day.
